Residential Evictions by James Barrowman, Solicitor - £30.00

It is now half a generation since the last book on Residential Evictions was published. James Barrowman's book meets an undoubted need to explain the law on eviction in the domestic rented sector.

The book comprehensively summarises the case law including many technicalities. It discusses both public and private sector law making reference to both recent and classic case law as well as court procedures.

The technical issues are discussed in some detail.

The book will be essential reading for those acting for landlords or tenants as well as for academic commentators, students or researchers.

"This is a welcome publication. Its tone is scholarly, authoritative and thorough. It was on my book shelf the moment of publication".

Derek O'Carroll, Advocate.

"Evicting people should be a stringent court process involving detailed examination of the technical and substantive issues. It should not be a rubber stamp exercise. This book is a major step in helping us to take the rights of those threatened with homelessness seriously".

Paul Brown, Solicitor.

"Why do lawyers keep making housing law so complicated? In the old days I did not have to worry about whether I would get decree!"

Unnamed landlord.

The author, James Barrowman, is a solicitor in private practice at Brodies LLP, formerly with Legal Services Agency, where he specialised in defended evictions at Glasgow Sheriff Court.

The book received support from the Scottish Executive.
